

Motivating Phrases

The ultimate goal of any sales copy is to get the reader to take some type of action. Unfortunately, what often happens is, nothing. The reader doesn't feel compelled to click the link or call the phone number so they leave empty handed. The reason for this failure generally lies with the words being used. Readers rarely take the initiative or make a decision without being persuaded to do so. You have to give them a reason to take action.

When writing copy, stop and consider what emotions or circumstances would prompt your reader to take action. Working in conjunction with the hook and the call to action, these motivating phrases will help influence readers to buy or follow through with whatever action you are asking them to take.

When writing motivational phrases, you can highlight a positive – order now and something good will happen “order now and get a bonus” or a negative – if you don't order now, something bad will happen “wait till tomorrow and you'll have to pay twice as much”.

Here are some motivating phrases you can use in your copy.
